I DON'T WANT NO DOUBLE NEGATION!

GRIN Verlag Mai 2009, 2009. sonst. Bücher. Book Condition: Neu. 218x62x1 mm. This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - Seminar paper from the year 2009 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies - Linguistics, grade: 1,3, Dresden Technical University (Anglistik/Amerikanistik), course: Seminar 'Syntactic Patterns in English', language: English, abstract: Imagine an English lesson in a fifth grade somewhere in the USA. The class consists of 25 pupils - ten of them are noticeably of African descent. The white teacher gives instructions to the pupils, wanting them to write an imaginative story about a topic of their own choice. A black boy in the last row raises his arm, asking: 'So there ain't no restriction at all ' The teacher - visibly annoyed by the pupil's interrogation - shouts in his direction: 'I don't want no double negation in your texts!' Although this story arose from my imagination, this little anecdote directly leads me to the topic of this paper: Negation in African American Vernacular English (AAVE). The situation described above might seem funny - especially because the teacher uses double negation in his answer himself - but its content appears to be sad reality for millions of black students all over the United States of America: White teachers do not accept 'Black Talk' as a proper language to be used in official institutions like schools but tend to call its speech patterns and expressions - that have been proved by many linguists in the past decades to be part of an own scientifically accepted language system - orthographically and grammatically wrong. As Geneva Smitherman states it in the preface of her book 'Talking That Talk' (2000): It [is] obvious that despite decades of research and scholarly work on Ebonics, there are still large numbers...
